Estudio de la contaminación por metales pesados y otros procesos de degradación química en los suelos en los invernaderos del poniente almeriense. José Joaquín Ramos Miras,2009-04-01 La agricultura intensiva en el poniente Almeriense constituye un ejemplo de desarrollo endógeno. Su impulso ha determinado el progreso económico y social de una de las áreas tradicionalmente más deprimidas de España. Pero este desarrollo, esta acompañado de un uso abusivo de los suelos que puede producir una degradación de los mismos. El presente trabajo se centra en el estudio de la evolución de las características fisico-químicas y los niveles de contaminación de metales pesados, tanto totales como biodisponibles, de los suelos de invernadero del Poniente Almeriense a lo largo de los años de cultivo de los invernaderos. Los resultados muestran que los suelos de invernadero están sufriendo un proceso de degradación química en la que sus características físico-químicas están siendo afectadas por los años que llevan en producción, así como un proceso de acumulación de metales pesados en los mismos procedentes, principalmente, de los agroquímicos empleados. Para evaluar los niveles de contaminación se han establecido los niveles de fondo y referencia de metales pesados en estos suelos. Además se han empleado tres índices, el equivalente de Zn, la relación Zn/Cd y el porcentaje de la fracción extraíble. La evaluación de estos niveles y de los tres índices empleados, indican un que los suelos de invernadero están sufriendo un proceso de contaminación por metales pesados. Por tanto podemos afirmar que la agricultura intensiva esta afectando negativamente a los suelos de invernadero del Poniente Almeriense.
