

The Time Is Always Right To Do What Is Right

SA Adler

Don't wait. The time will never be just right. - HiNative The time will never be just right. It is referring to a call to action, asking individuals to act now while they can as the 'perfect opportunity' is hard to come by or nonexistent. The time is always right to do what is right. - HiNative If the speaker wanted to say "It's right time to do what is right", it could be "Time is always right to do what is right." I suppose its meaning is "Now is the right time to do what is right.", but cannot assure it's correct or not. I want to know not only a translation but why the translation is right. "Do things right" ≠ "Do right things" | HiNative Do things right the first time given. Always do the right things in life The time is always right to do what is right. - HiNative It's always the "right time" (the correct time" to do something right. The phrasing might sound a little choppy or unnatural because he was trying to make it sound poetic. I hope this helps!|You don't have to choose a time to do the right thing.
